Benazir Bhutto Says 60,000 She'll Stay, Fight Zia Protest In Manila

LARKANA, Pakistan — Benazir Bhutto, a central figure in Pakistan's opposition movement, brought her brother's body home for burial Wednesday and vowed to stay and fight the military regime that overthrew and executed her father, Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

Tens of thousands of supporters greeted Miss Bhutto, who was ac-companied by four other leading politicians, when she arrived from self-imposed exile in Europe with the body of her brother, Shahnawaz Bhutto He was found dead last month at his home in France under circumstances yet to

He had been wanted in Pakistan on terrorism charges.

Bhutto supporters lined the road for nearly 20 miles (32 kilometers) as the body was escorted into Lar-kana, an agricultural center 200 miles north of Karachi that is the Bhutto family's hometown.

Tass Says Test to 'Militarize' Space

MOSCOW — The Soviet news agency, Tass, said Wednesday that Washington's decision to press ahead with testing an anti-satellite weapon would cause a superpower arms race in space.

Tass said in a commentary that Moscow would keep to the unilateral freeze on anti-satellite weapons announced by late President Yuri V. Andropov only if other countries held off too. "Washington has made another step along the line of preparing for large-scale militarization of space," Tass said. It said responsibility

Peru Dismisses 37 Police Generals

LIMA (AP) - The government of President Alan Garcia Perez has dismissed 37 police commanders in the first step of a plan to reorganize

Peru's police forces to rid them of corruption. The president also has announced that he would completely revamp the judicial system. The dismissal of the police commanders, who hold the rank of general in the military structure of Pern's police forces, went into effect when their names were published in the official newspaper, El Peruano. Twenty-one commanders were in the Civil Guard and 16 were in the Peruvian Investigative Police.

Mr. Garcia, who visited a military barracks Monday, said that any of the 75,000 members of three police forces could be relieved of duty for participating in a crime or the presumption of committing a crime and also for incompetence or inefficiency.

Iran Denies Attack on Belgian Ship

BRUSSFIS (Reuters) — Iran denied on Wednesday involvement in the missile attack on the Belgian-registered oil tanker Naess Leopard off the coast of Qatar on Sunday, and suggested that Iraq was responsible. Reacting to a formal complaint by the Belgian government, Iran issued a statement categorically denying any role, and saying that "Iran opposes all violations of international law, such as the sinking of neutral ships."

"The government of Iraq," the statement added, "has announced with

U.S. Midwest In Economic Recovery, Leaders Say

By James Barron New York Times Service MACKINAC ISLAND, Michigan — The governors of seven Mid-dle Western states have spent three days giving an upbeat answer to the question of whether the region is pulling out of its decline.

ering, which ended Tuesday, was The Midwest on the Move." But the governors made it clear that the theme did not that the region's residents and wealth were moving to the South or the West.

What is happening, the gover-nors said, is that innovative technologies are being developed here. Of the 10 states with the most patents, six are in the Middle West, and the region has four of the na-tion's top 10 universities ranked in order of money spent on research

Governor James J. Blanchard of Michigan said that fewer residents of the Middle West were migrating to places that promised more jobs and lower taxes.

To officials who have staked their political careers and their states' futures on bringing in companies and jobs, that was welcome. news. And they are apparently not alone in seeing an upturn. Louis Harris said that his polling organization had found that only the South was more optimistic than the Middle West

"This is a recent trend, believe me," he said. "For most of the past four years, the Midwest has led the nation in gloom and despair. Something obvious is taking place."

But by some measures, the region has a long way to go in its quest for economic well-being. Some of the manufacturing states also belong to the smaller Great Lakes Governors Conference, which earlier this year signed a charter with two Canadian provinces to prevent water from being piped to states in the South and the est that need it to continue their growth. Mr. Blanchard said the Great Lakes group met more often than the Midwestern Conference, which, he said, had a reputation of being a "more social" group.

But the dispute was patched up, and this conference opened with Mr. Blanchard borrowing a line from Mark Twain by saying that reports of the region's demise had been greatly exaggerated.

Attending with him were Governors Robert D. Orr of Indiana, the chairman of the conference, John Ashcroft of Missouri, Terry E. Branstad of lowa, John W. Carlin of Kansas, Richard F. Celeste of Ohio and Robert Kerrey of Nebraska, and Lieutenant Governors James T. Flynn of Wisconsin and Marlene Johnson of Minnesota.

Governors James R. Thompson of Illinois, George Sinner of North Dakota and Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky did not attend or send representatives.

Mr. Orr said that three years ago the last time the group convened on Mackinac Island, a resort island between Lake Huron and Lake braska — rose at least six-tenths of Michigan, "things were not so good a percent in that period." ## Nicaraguan Rebel Group Drafts Code In Effort to Improve Image on Rights

The rebel Nicaraguan Democratic Force says it has established a code of conduct for homicide under conditions vio- lating the Geneva Convention, to investigate allegations of abuses of conduct for its 15,000-strong army, which has been accused of human rights abuses in its war against the leftist Sandinist government in Managua.

The 70-article code, a draft of which was made available Tuesday, provides for sentences of up to 16 years for rape, murder and robbery and establishes norms for treatment of prisoners and civilians.

Carlos Icaza, an exiled Nicaraguan lawyer who a month ago was named attorney general for the U.S.-backed rebel group, said the code would be presented to the group's leaders for final approval.

The code, which calls for adherence to the Geneva Convention, was viewed by diplomats here as an attempt to improve the image of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force. known by its Spanish acronym

Whites Urged to 'Reclaim' South Africa

By Alan Cowell

New York Times Service PRETORIA — The tones are onorous and seem reasoned and the message is this: The revolution is coming, and the blacks will try to take all, and the whites will light back for the land that is theirs. And

Over coffee, the words of Eugene Terre Blanche, the leader of South Africa's most extreme rightist not seem particularly perplexing in this land of divided people and raw racial passions cloaked in complex rationales. Elsewhere, they might

"If the blacks start a revolution, if our government capitulates and hands over our land, if the blacks start a revolution to destroy our property, rape our women, even our children," he said, "there will be a white force under the leader-ship of the Afrikaner Resistance Movement that will fight back in a will take back our lands which are rightfully ours. We will implement a white people's state."

In the uncharted reaches to the political right of President Pieter W. Botha, Mr. Terre Blanche suggests there are passions to be stirred by such talk. He speaks to a segment of Afrikanerdom still far from the centers of power, but his words touch atavistic fears of slave

In this context, survival is seen as continued control over everything that affects the lives of Afrikaners and the rest of South Africa's 4.5 mil-

Mr. Botha has so far not enacted any of the promises, but the edges themselves have become the grist of controversy.

To Mr. Botha's right, for instance, Dr. Treumicht seeks custody of the Afrikaner soul. He argues that Mr. Botha has strayed from traditional apartheid, opening a way to black majority rule. Dr. Treurnicht's argument is that limited reforms offered by Mr. Bomovement is thought to have about Afrikaners seeking power, but have the and seek to implant the racial since largely faded.

Despite their disapproval, Mr. "I am not an extremist," Mr. envisaged by the original theologians of apartheid, an Afrikams, word meaning separateness. "To become free again," he told the Conservative Party's annual congress in Pretoria on Tuesday we will have to make big, big changes in the changes the Nation. al Party has made towards multiracialism." The National Party, led by Mr. Botha, has ruled in South Africa since 1948. Dr. Treurment leads those who broke from it in opposition to Mr. Botha's limited reform program in 1982. That was a traumatic moment for a white tribe that long saw unity as a weapon in its struggle to survive in a continent that offered, in its view, nothing but hostility. The arguments sometimes seem 4 little more than variations on a theme of survivalist dogma, computed on racial distinction and preconceptions. At the Conservative Party congress, one delegate was quoted Tuesday as saying blacks were "childlike people" whose irves revolved around sex and who could not think ahead for themselves, so the white man should do their thinking for them.

But the perceived challenge to Mr. Botha from the right is one that haunts his cabinet. It is said, by Western diplomats, to have been a factor in his decision last week to withhold a clear-cut announcement of political reforms that might stem the violence of black townships, where more than 620 people have died since last September.

Mr. Terre Blanche's conversation seems to suggest that, when he speaks of re-establishing Afrikaner ominance in the manner of the Afrikaner farmer's republics of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, there are people of like mind waiting to take up arms to light

"I do not think," he said Tuesday of South Africa's whites, "that our people realize what dire straits we are in. But the Afrikaner is accustomed to fight.

in speaking of the Afrikaners, Mr. Terre Blanche drew a distinction between those who made the Great Trek and those, like Mr. Botha's forebears, who remained in

The wariness implicit in such re-marks is compounded by a sense of frustration at the failure of Japan to offer more help in China's drive to modernize its economy. of this year, Japan had surplus of $2.8 billion, aggravating China's decline of hard currency reserves. Still more irksome from the Chinese standpoint, the Japanese have responded limply so far to requests that they loosen up on the flow of capital and technology.

"The Japanese are our neighbors in Asia, and they have profound historical responsibilities here," a trade official remarked. "We expected more."

On a personal level, Japanese visiting and living here have gained a reputation for being, among foreigners, outstandingly polite and self-effacing. One Japanese businessman, asked why he did not press his case harder with a Chinese government ministry that was dragging its feet on a potentially lucrative deal, replied: "You must understand what Japan has done here. It is not for us to make a

However, there is concern among Chinese that attitudes like these are becoming rarer as the wartime generation dies out and is replaced by younger Japanese who feel no personal guilt. There was an echo of this in a Chinese protest in

A Chinese spokesman said that the visit would "hurt the feelings" of Chinese since the shrine commemorated such wartime figures as Hideki Tojo, who headed Japan's government through much of the war. When the visit went ahead Chinese newspapers published re-ports of protests at the shrine.

For its part, China is using the anniversary to ensure that wartime memories remain alive. The government has organized mass rallies the preparation of special books and films, commemorative stamps, academic seminars and wreath-laying ceremonies. The climactic even is to occur Sept. 2, the day of the signing of Japan's surrender, when 100,000 people are expected to lay wreaths at the Beijing monumen to the People's Heroes.

The anniversory also is being used for other political ends. Articles, books and films are giving prominence to the role played in World War II by Chiang Kaishek's Nationalist soldiers, later defeated by the Communists in a help ailing manufacturers by shutting out foreign competitors. In refreshing contrast, Senator Bill Bradley aims to treat the disease, not just its symptoms. He may not have all the answers, but it is good to find someone in Washington looking to save open trade, on which the world's prosperity depends.

With the dollar costing a third more than in 1981 in international exchange, even the most efficient American producers have trouble competing with foreigners. But protectionism, although tempting, is no fix at all. Tariffs or quotas protect inefficient as well as efficient companies, raise prices and invite retaliation against American products. Just such a cycle of protection and retaliation smashed the world's trading system in the 1930s.

Senator Bradley wants to reduce the political appeal of protectionism by giving workers displaced by imports some hope of other employment. He would use a modest tariff of l percent on all imports to give them a choice between higher unemployment benefits or stipends for retraining and moving to new jobs.

This proposed "Job Security Bank" is still a vague idea. One obvious source of concern is the precedent of using a tariff to raise revenue. if the program is worth doing it is worth financing with general tax revenues. But the underlying concept is laudable: It is immoral and impolitic to expect individual workers to bear the brunt of great economic change.

Senator Bradley has another idea, perhaps even more controversial, for managing foreign

Most members of the U.S. Congress want to exchange rates. To reduce the dollar's value elp ailing manufacturers by shutting out forhe would require the Federal Reserve to sell dollars and stand ready to intervene in currency markets to prevent any rapid rate changes. The Reagan administration has opposed such intervention, arguing that it interferes with free market forces. But markets are not an end in themselves. The real questions are whether the Fed has the muscle to counter market forces and whether Americans would accept the consequences. At this stage, a determined effort by the Fed would probably be effective, if only because owners of dollars must be ready to believe that these will soon lose more value. But as the trade deficit dimin-ishes the budget deficit crisis would accelerate. A cheaper dollar would almost certainly reduce imports, reducing the total goods available for government and private purchases and investments. That would leave the Federal Reserve with a tough choice: force up interest rates to crowd out private borrowers who compete with the Treasury, or expand the money supply, in effect inviting inflation to ration credit among public and private investors.

No conceivable trade or exchange policy can have much value unless the United States also puts its fiscal house in order. The American economy needs open world markets to thrive. Managing exchange rates is not the only way to keep them open, and may not be the best way. But Mr. Bradley invites a debate that should have started long ago.

-THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Appearances in Power

The Pentagon has now done just what it had to do in the case of Mary Ann Gillecce. That is good news and bad. In a technical sense the case has been neatly disposed of, Miss Gilleece has been pilloried in a report by the department's inspector general and has resigned. But the almost surgical nature of the process by which she was removed is itself a part of the problem. Words are cheap in cases such as this, but we would have welcomed a few from on high, some sense of indignation on the part of the secretary or deputy secretary. Plainly they care. It would help if they said so. Miss Gilleece has been caught and is gone. What is the lesson? That is what they should tell us.

The inspector general took us as far as a person of his rank can. On several occasions the present inspector general, Joseph Sherick. has shown himself to be an important force for good in the department. The department's senior officials had turned to him on July 3, about a week after stories saying Miss Gillecce was considering setting up a consulting firm appeared in the press. The stories suggested that she was soliciting future business from defense contractors over whose affairs and profits she still exercised official sway.

Before writing to the contractors, Miss Gilleece had gone to the attorney in the general counsel's office who has charge of conflict-ofinterest questions. There is some dispute as to how much she told him and what he replied. Mr. Sherick said he should have been sharper in the advice he gave. He suggested that, in future, ethics advice to senior officials be more formal and in writing, and that the standards of conduct be clarified. But ultimately, he said, "responsibility ... rested with Ms. Gillecce, herself an attorney. [We] do not believe her faith reliance on the advice of counsel Mr. Sherick said there was no evidence that Miss Gilleece had broken the law, or had specifically helped any contractor whose custom she was seeking. Her problem instead was with the departmental rules, he said, which forbid not just conflict of interest but the appearance of it. Appearances — and the public confidence that they can so powerfully affect - are partly what is at stake here. We are compelled to turn to Mr. Sherick. "The actions taken by Ms. Gillecce, and the ensuing publicity, have so compromised her ability to perform her rule making and policy setting role that she can no longer effectively serve the department in such a position," he wrote. Her violations of the rules "created a lack of public confidence in her official conduct."

Defense contractors both are and are not like other private companies in the economy. Their relationship with their prime customer is not the same as the arm's-length relationships that prevail in private transactions. On many issues the interests of department and contractors are the same. Almost every administration looks to the contractors for some of its senior defense officials; as is well known, the contractors recruit from the department in turn. The revolving door is itself a source of public distrust, yet difficult to deal with Congress just tried, again, to legislate against it, and not with much success. The Gillecce case is easy: others are hard. The secretary needs to speak out on them, more than he has. They are ethical issues, and the inspector general's office should not be the only place to which one looks for guidance on them.

Karami: At a Loss for Words

What can I say to the citizen when we have lost all sense of values, morality, heritage and civilization? Say or do? Is it any good resigning? Or staying on without the least ability to help people bear the burden? I don't know. - Prime Minister Rashid Karami of Lebanon, quoted in The Guardian (London).

Marcos: Overrating His Hand?

Cut off from most sources of new credit, faced with a contracting economy, a Communist insurgency, waning popular and inter-national support and growing pressure to im-plement unpalatable political, economic and military reforms. President Marcos is considering calling an early presidential election. The prospect is a worrying one. A clean presiden-tial election, following last year's open and fair egislative poll in which the opposition won a third of the seats, would also strengthen the country's democratic institutions. If this is what President Marcos intends to be the outcome of an early election - one is not officially due until 1987 — then he should go ahead. But there are good grounds for suspicion.

It is true that, under considerable pressure, Mr. Marcos has made some changes. But there has been as yet no fundamental reform such as doing away with the Philippines' particular brand of "crony capitalism" or the opening of a genuine dialogue with the opposition.

A big reason why Mr. Marcos has been able to get away with half measures is the belief that U.S. political and economic support would go on indefinitely because of Washington's desire to keep its military bases. [He] needs to ask himself how far the United States would be willing to go in defending these important bases. If, as a result of his failure to implement the necessary policies, widespread upheaval were to combine with Communist insurgency to plunge the country into chaos, would an American president sacrifice a single U.S. soldier to defend the bases? Almost certainly not. - The Financial Times (London).

Capitaine, the companion of two policemen attached to the 8th arrondissement, being instrumental in the capture of two "apaches." Something like a pitched battle was going on between two bands of these individuals when Capitaine and his uniformed comrades came on the scene. At once the "anaches" united forces and opened fire on the police. The dog was let loose and a moment later he was in pursuit of the bandits who at the sight of him had taken to their heels. Capitaine, however, succeeded in keeping two of them fast prisoners until policemen arrived.

1935: Boeing Bomber Sets Records DAYTON, Ohio - A new chapter in the possibilities of aerial warfare was written when the giant new Boeing "flying fortress," 15 tons of potential death, landed here after making a non-stop test flight of 2,300 miles [3,700 kilometers] from Seattle in exactly nine hours at the speed of 255 miles an hour. The huge armored bomber hurtled through the air at an altitude of 10,000 feet, smashing all world records for military planes. This is the most formidable death machine ever given a public demonstration. One ton of bombs can be carried out for the state of the ried, and five gun turrets enable the bomber to protect itself from attack on every side.

America and Japan Should Make Peace and Link Up

WASHINGTON — In the recent 40th anniversary celebration of the end of World War II, two facts were obscured that need to be made clear.

First, America is still at war with Japan. Second, it is losing

I visited Japan not long ago, congrainlated everyone from Prime Minister Yasukiro Na-kasone on down for Japan's incredible postwar trade success, told them it was can Americans quite a lot of trouble and suggest ed that it would cause them trouble next I don't think anyone was listening. The largely cosmetic "action package" of trade reforms announced by the Japanese government in July only reinforced that feeling.

Having returned from Japan to hear a ris-ing chorus of protectionist sentiment from my former colleagues in Congress, I believe it may be worthwhile to offer a few ideas on what can be done to end the war, secure the peace and increase the prosperity of the two countries and the world at large. The one-sided nature of trade between

America and Japan in recent years is familiar to everyone. What is less well known is that these persistent trade imbalances have been so large for so long that America is rapidly accumulating a foreign debt surpassed only by its federal deficit. By 1990, that trade deficit could well total a trillion dollars.

It should be noted here that Japan is not the only trade problem the United States has. But it is the biggest one, and if this problem can be solved, they all can.

I think it can be solved, in three stages.

In the short term, Americans must get the attention of the Japanese and let them know they are serious about this issue. The Senate's recent resolution condemning Japan's trade practices — a resolution that passed on a 92-0 vole — is one way of getting Japan's atten-tion. The flurry of increasingly protectionist bills in Congress is one way of keeping it. But Americans must remember that they are dealing with live ammunition here, and take care not to shoot themselves in the foot The disastrous Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930 was rushed through Congress in a similar mood, and it took 14 years and a world war to straighten out the mess Still, it is not too much to ask - even to demand — that the Japanese give America better access to their domestic market, in return for keeping the vast and lucrative American market open to them.

I frankly doubt that many American consumer goods will interest many Japanese consumers, particularly until American manufacturers make a more conscientious effort to By Howard H. Baker Jr.

The writer, a lawyer, was Senate majority leader from December 1980 to last January.

But in the fields of finance, telecommunications, government contracts and other largeenterprises, I believe both countries would profit by greater American participation in the Japanese economy.

The second stage of the solution is to do everything that America can unilaterally to improve its trade position. This involves, among other things, reducing the federal defi-cit, rechecking the stock of exportable goods and preparing more diligently and deliberately to compete in a global market.

As for the deficit, Congress labored might ily and courageously this year to reach what the wider world saw as a largely cosmetic deficit reduction package — much as it saw Mr. Nakasone's "action package" of trade reforms. The hard truth is that Congress must do more next year, and the next, and the next, before the deficit problem nears solution. As for exports, it may well be time to reconsider the prohibition on sales of Alaskan North Slope oil to Japan. That prohibition was imposed in a time of energy crises and embargoes, and while it may have made sense at the time, it does not make much sense now that we are awash in a sea of oil. Several billion dollars could flow America's way almost immediately with the flow of Alaskan oil to Japan. Washington should at least put it on the table and see what it can get in trade.

As for preparing to compete with the world, I agree with the governor of Tennessee, Lamar Alexander, that this is "the greatest challenge for America's future," and I am happy to point to my own state of Tennessee as a model for such preparation,
I told the president of Nissan not long ago that, with a combination of Japanese industrial technique and American pride, we are building better Datsuns in Smyrna, Tennes-see, than they build in Tokyo. And the people of Spring Hill, Tennessee, working with the people of General Motors, are looking forward to selling a truly competitive American automobile, the Saturn, to the whole world.

The third and final stage of the solution is for the United States and Japan to understand and agree that they have a special role of mutual leadership to play in the world, that this role will expand and intensify in the new century just ahead, and that they cannot play this critical role successfully if they cannot work well together at every level of enterprise, With apologies to other friends and allies of adapt their products to Japanese preferences. America around the world, the plain fact is that the United States and Japan share an economic diversity and a technological capacity that no nation or group of nations can match. If current trends continue, this distinction will only be more pronounced in the future. Both sides must be prepared to deal effectively and wisely with this emerging economic and political reality. One step in that preparation might be to establish a new form of trading currency between the two countries that reduces or eliminates the disparity between the yen and the dollar. We might include Canada — the largest U.S. trading partner, with which the United States has its second largest deficit in this new currency arrangement, creating our own version of the European Currency Unit that serves the Common Market.

Another step, solely up to the Japanese, those success has made them the "OPEC of trade," may be to recycle a substantial portion of their trade profits in a comprehensive and constructive program of foreign invest-ment. Tennessee has benefited handsomely from such investment, and Japan could win a

with an expanded investment program

Much of the Third World, for example, still reels from the effects of the other OPEC's reess from the effects of the other Orric's reign of greed Japan could make a major contribution, worthy of its standing in the first rank of global economic power, to the alleviation of the Third World's distress and to the construction of a more prosperous and productive world economy.

Whatever specific steps may be required to cement this new and special relationship between the two countries, those steps must be taken in a spirit of mutual respect and with a minimum of pettifoggery.

American politicians must undertand that U.S. policy cannot be "Let their Toyotas sit. on their docks," because Americans like Toyotas and want to buy them.

Japanese politicians must understand that cosmetic concessions, arrived at only after the most torthous negotiations, will try the pa-tience of a frustrated Congress and may lead to protectionism of the most virulent strain.

In short, there is no political or economic profit in continuing this war, which both sides would ultimately lose. The time has come for peace among friends, and for progress and prosperity in which all nations can share.

Criticizing South Africa: Israel Should Clean Up Its Own Act

FIRST encountered the charge that Zionist racism makes Israel comparable to South Africa in the early 1970s, while I was chief representative of the International Student Movement for the United Nations. I protested vehemently in a personal letter to an assistant of Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim. Officials of the American Zionist Youth Foundation sent copies of that letter to Jewish university students in the United States and Israel, and then commissioned me to write monthly articles on Zionism for their newsletter.

I next confronted the Israel-South Africa comparison at Princeton University while obtaining a master's degree in international affairs. Professor Richard Falk, himself Jewish, repeatedly linked the situations of the two countries in his course on international law. I remember sharing outrage of my Israeli student colleagues. Once again I protested.

World Jewish Congress, and on un-related journalistic assignments, I traveled widely in the Middle East. My perspective broadened.

provide my own history to make clear that for years I aggressively challenged comparisons of South Af-rica and Israel. Now I have come to conclude that the similarities between them outweigh the differences.

Tragically, Israel today has be-come precisely what many of its liberal founders feared — a besieged, divided, polarizing country whose methods of repression against the Palestinians parallel those of white South Africa against the blacks. Analogies are always imperfect analytical tools. Historically and cultur-ally, conditions in Israel and South Africa are replete with differences. I leave those to be catalogued by others, who will no doubt be eager to challenge my conclusion. Here are what I view as the important points of similarity:

Both states are escalating militarism, intimidation and brutality. In both cases; self-determine tion is being sought by a mistreated, oppressed, abused ethnic group—the blacks of South Africa, the Palestinians in the territories occupied by Israel since the 1967 war.

By Mark A. Bruzonsky

 Both oppressed groups have resorted to defiance and violence. In both cases the potential for escalating conflict is growing.

Riots and strikes are spreading in South Africa, and there is a state of emergency. The results of Israel's policies are being reaped in a degenerating economy and a descent toward anti-democratic attitudes germinating amid anti-Arab sentiments.
Responding to these conditions and to the continued Palestinian struggle for an independent state, the government has further stepped up a campaign against its Palestinian subjects that over the years has included deportation, imprisonment, collective punishment and, occasionally, documented torure. Emergency reg-ulations left over from British mandate days in what used to be called Palestine, similar to those imposed in South Africa, are enforced by Israel

When Ronald Reigns, Who Governs?

Q UEENSTOWN, Maryland — Thirty or so liberal arts professors from small colleges spent the better part of a recent week pondering American values in a wooded grove on the Wye River not far from here. The "readings" ran from . Aristotle and Plato to Machiavelli, the Declaration of Independence, Lincoln and Franklin Delano Roosevelt. A few nonacademic gadflies were invited along to lend contem-porary context and/or comic relief. In that spirit, I offered what struck me at the time as a Constructive Thought. We were talking about "citizenship in the American polity" (about how well we govern ourselves); the consensus seemed to be that the system doesn't work. By way of striking a positive note,

I ventured the proposition that what America needs is a monarchy. You might have thought I had suggested a Fourth Reich. A monarchy, the assembled academics impatiently explained, is what the American Revolution was against. A constitutional monarchy, I explained, is what I had in mind.

I would like to take this opportunity to pursue the point. The United States is alone among the Western democracies in ing in one office, the presidency, two jobs: head of govern-ment and head of state. The European democracies have kings or queens or presidents to symbolize the state as father figures and friends in court for all the people. To run the government, they have prime ministers whose power resides in political parties and their command of partiaments. As Bob command of parliaments. As Bob Hope stild, when he was asked why he had a handkerchief neatly folded in his breast pocket and another outstretched arms, palms up — all stuffed into his jacket cuff, "One is for show and one is for blow." But Americans have only one handkerchief; they ask their presidents to personify the integrity and continuity of the state while managing a government whose power flows from a legislature that his own political party may or may not control. You do not have to search far back in the record to demonstrate that American presidents have rarely been good at both.

Jimmy Carter had too tight a grasp on the controls of the executive branch. Congress was in friendly Democratic hands, but he got in a fight with a rabbit and said things like "Trust me," which is more than a politician can expect. Then came Iran, and he lost the prerequisite of a head of state: a meaningful relationship with the people.

With Ronald Reagan it is just the other way around. Like Mr. Carter, he ran for the presidency as a head of state, with a proper, royal dis-dain for the grubby side of govern-ment. He would be the people's champion against the craven spe-cial interests of Congress and the bureaucracies. Unlike Mr. Carter or any other recent president (ex-cept Eisenhower), King Ronald has retained the trust of his subjects by seeing to it that they do not look upon him as a head of government. Cosseted by courtiers, he lets his ministers take the falls. When the parliament rebels, the head of state cannot be held accountable. The

these convey the right blend of benevolence and innocence.

A president who is good at the role of head of state is only expected to propose: a Middle East peace plan, a foolproof bubble to end the threat of nuclear war, the consignment of an "evil empire" to history's ash heap, a balanced budget. You guys work it out," he says... The trouble is that even if it works with the people, the relationship is personal. The chemistry may get some good things done and in-sulate the president from the conse-quences of bad things done, or undone, but it is a sometime thing. For a coherent, stable way of gov-erning, you need both a head of state and a head of government. A president who is good at one of those functions is almost doomed to be bad at the other. "The modern president's authority, essentially, derives from his status as a popular hero," political scientist William Schneider wrote recently in the Los Angeles Times. "If a [European] prime minister ... proves to be an ineffective leader, power can be transferred to another party leader without creating a political crisis. It is much harder to transfer legitimacy in the Ameri-can system. A president's power is personal. It must be established directly with the American people and cannot be transferred." Mr. Schneider knows no sure cure for the political system. It may simply be something that we have to live with. That is why I brought it up at a learning experience on Maryland's tranquil eastern shore. It was a perfect occasion for thinking thoughts that lead you nowhere in particular, in no hurry.

Gray Area of Animal Vision Is Proving a Colorful Field By Walter Sullivan
New York Times Service THE world of animal vision, long a gray area for scientists, is beginning to come alive with color. While research in the field is in its infancy, recent findings indicate that some species see brightly hued landscapes in colors invisible to human eyes, where others see drab colors or none at all

What does the world look like to a bird, a bee, a goldfish, a cat?
What color does a buil see when confronted with a red flag? Does the "color blindness" of some monkeys explain the origin of such defeets in human beings?

For centralies there was no way to answer many of these questions because it was so hard to determine whether an animal could see a particular color. But new testing methods are making it possible.

Animal research may lead to a better understanding of human vision. Researchers are discovering many parallels between color vision in animals and humans, particularly in connection with color

Dr. Gerald H. Jacobs, a specialist on animal vision at the University of California at Santa Barbara, in Peruvian squirrel monkeys.

The animals are exposed to three along that impulse to the nerves panels whose colors can be altered.

In each test, two of the panels are of identical color and the third is different. If the monkey can identi-

Dr. Jacobs, a professor of psyrelatively poor color vision.

Humans are rarely, if ever, totally color-blind, but almost 8 percent of Cansatian males lack functioning sensors in one of the three categories needed for full color vision. The human retina contains two basic kinds of receptors: cones, which provide the basis for color vision, and rods, which record faint light. Each cone contains a photopigment particularly sensitive to one of three parts of the light in the electromagnetic spectrum. The peak response of one class of cones is to a wavelength of 419 nanome-ters (billionths of a meter) in the violet part of the spectrum. Another class is most sensitive to 531 nanometers, or green. The third class of cones responds chiefly to 559 nanometers, a shade of green, but its range of sensitivity extends to yellow and red. The cones receiving an electrohas been studying color blindness magnetic impulse corresponding to the wavelength of a color pass

Like the color-discriminating apparatus of the human eye, that of insects depends on recording and comparing light intensities in these three regions of the spectrum. But insect sees can be vastly different.

Being sensitive to ultraviolet light, a bee zeroing in on a black-eyed Susan sees a bull's-eye pattern in what to human eyes are uniformly yellow petals. Because the bee's eye cannot see red, a white phlox blossom looks blue-green.

Dr. Kenneth M. McCrea of Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, an authority on insect vision, says the flowers look white to human eyes because human retinas are sensitive to red, green and blue, which produce white when mixed. The bee, however, cannot see red.

I HE new research in animals is changing some old notions about what they see. Dr. Jacobs says cats are not totally color-blind, as once thought. Nevertheless, he believes of the spectrum. There have been paired perception of green, occurs no definitive studies of dogs' color vision, he added, but it is probably differences of only a few billionths of a meter. Pigeons use a combination of photosensors and light filters that may record as many as five different spectral bands.

Some animals that are daytime what a person sees and what an feeders, such as hummingbirds, can see into the ultraviolet part of the spectrum that humans cannot see at all, which may help them find flowers or ripe fruit.

Frogs, in tests with illuminated panels, show a preference for blue, and it appears that color vision is common in amphibians. However, Dr. David J. Ingle of the Eye Re-search Institute in Boston, who has been working with frogs, notes that the limits of their color perception have not been established. Reptile retinas are rich in the receptors normally used for color vision, but their ability also remains untested. Goldfish, like humans, have three classes of color recentor and their performance has been tested in various laboratories, including that of the Rowland Institute for Science in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Early this year, Dr. Ingle, then at Rowland, reported that goldfish determine the color of a

Dinosaur Bones Found in Alaska

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — More than 150 dinosaur bones have been discovered on Alaska's North Stope, a find that casts doubt on the theory that two months of darkness from a huge dust cloud after an asteroid collision with Earth caused dinosaurs' extinction.

NEW YORK (NYT) — The Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center has received a $36.2-million gift from Laurance S. Rockefeller. The hospital plans to build a $78-million research and conference center, partly financed by the donation and named in honor of Rockefeller's father, John D. Rockefeller Jr., officials said.

The gift, which officials called one of the largest ever by an individual to a health-care institution, came in response to a $300-million fundraising drive, bringing the drive just over halfway to its goal.

Supersensitive X-Ray Camera Made

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Scientists from the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico have developed a supersensitive X-ray camera to be carried by the space shuttle, Military Space, a Washington newsletter, said the camera was meant to provide precise detection of nuclear weapons tests in Earth's atmosphere.

"We will use natural X-ray sources — stars and galaxies — to test the imaging capabilities," said Dr. Ed Fenimore, a Los Alamos physicist, The camera consists of 20 six-sided metal plates, each with more than 26,000 holes. Each hole acts as a pinhole camera. Current detectors can pick up X-rays with energy of fewer than 5,000 electron volts. the uterus, causing infertility.

Dr. Jerome Check, an associate professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia, said small doses of cough syrup or cold capsules containing the expectorant, guiafenesin, can thin the mucus. He said conventional treatments could cost $600 a month while a bottle of cough syrup was about $1.70.

Other specialists have criticized Dr. Check's research because he did not use scientific controls. But Dr. Joseph Bellina, an adviser to the National Institutes of Health and director of a fertility research center in New Orleans, said he frequently recommended the treatment.

its land is more depleted and its countries are generally poorer. It has far fewer trained scientists and research institutions and its inexperienced governments have been unwilling or unable to adopt policies that favor agricultural development over urban development.

1 WENTY years ago, Professor Eicher said, international experts believed they could quickly transfer Green Revolution technology to tional programs at the University of Nebraska and director of an international program, financed by AID, to develop new varieties of two staple grain crops in Africa, sorghum and millet.

Perhaps the most recent research success is a high-yielding drought-resistant strain of sorghum devel-oped in Sudan, one of the countries most severely affected by the drought. "It's so new that they're right now trying to get it into the hands of farmers," said Mr. Brady.

Dr. Woods Thomas, director of international programs at Purdue University, said several new hybrid sorghum strains had been developed by scientists working in Su-dan in the past six years. He said that one strain looked "very, very promising" in test plantings last year; its seed is being multiplied for distribution to farmers.

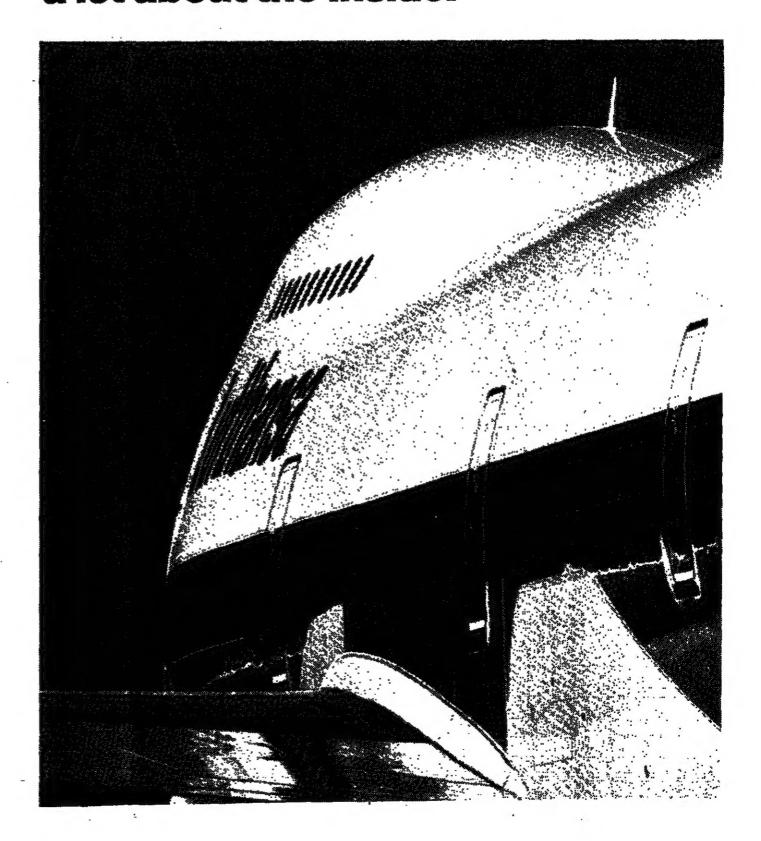

Similar gains may be on the more distant horizon with millet "Very little work has been done with millet over the years," said William D. Stegmeier, a research agronomist at Kansas State University, one of the leading U.S. centers of millet research. "I suspect part of the reason is that it's a crop consumed by the poorest people in the poorest areas of the world. But in the last few years it's been receiving a lot more attention, especially in Africa."

He said new varieties of millet were being grown on a small scale in several communities in Sudan including one that matures more quickly, making it potentially use-ful when the ramy season is short.

The most dramatic practical success so far, Mr. Brady said, is the recent widespread adoption in Zimbabwe of high-yielding strains of maize that were developed years ago by international and government research stations. This year's maize crop in Zimbabwe far exceeded expectations, Mr. Brady said, largely because the strains were used on small farms more widely than anyone predicted. "The notion that poor people won't accept new technology is hogwash," he said.

move will have to include the participation of the broader market, the traders said. Analysts also noted that while trading volnme has picked up from the very slow pace earlier this week, it remains relatively light and indicates that much of Wall Street continues to view the outlook for stocks with cantion.

Robert Stovall of Dean Witter Reynolds said t was too soon to say whether the climb, combined with Tuesday's advance, constituted a change in market direction. The moves up have occurred "in a vacuum of trend-changing develments." he said.

Mr. Stovall said that the market has drawn some support from a softer interest rate trend, the result of flat economic activity.

"The tone of the market is pretty good," said Robert Colby of Smith, Barney Harris Upham. Since the market has been down for about a month, people are reluctant to believe the trend is changing, he said.

Still, the decline appears to be over for the

Butcher-Singer Analyst Likes Contrarian Signs

By EDWARD ROHRBACH

WALL STREET WATCH

ARIS—Wall Street these days has the bulls and the bears buffaloed. Analysts and investors are groping around the stock market like blind men feeling separate parts of an elephant, each coming to different conclusions about the nature of the beast.

The bears temporarily have control of the market — there's a definite downward bias," said Richard Yashewski, technical analyst for Butcher & Singer in Philadelphia.

"But this clearly is not the time to run for Noah's Ark," he asserted. He describes Wall Street as only being in the midst of a "summer thunderstorm"

tors. He said these now show dampened enthusiasm toward stocks, which is usually taken as a contrarian sign that the market has room to move up.

has room to move up.

Therefore, "Sentiment is the most powerfully bullish it's been since July 1984," he said, noting that even optimism among professional market advisers, which had been high, currently shows some 30 percent of them outright bears, the highest figure since shortly before last January's upward surge on Wall Street.

"Sentiment figures are saying there's minimal downside risk in this market, probably just above 1,300," he said.

With the bond market in a "rally mode and stocks oversold," he sees Wall Street "building a foundation that will propel the Dow well over 1,400 in the final months of 1985."

Meanwhile, Robert Farrell, Merrill Lynch's chief market analyst, also sees a "good case" for stocks to begin advancing soon. However, he warns that the rally will have to show "breadth and rekindle buying interest" or risk aborting and sending Wall Street into a "10 to 15-percent shakeout" before the end of 1985.

E THINKS most investors are too complacent long term.

Investors, he says, are either overly confident now on the fundamental side because they are looking ahead to a resurgence of the U.S. economy, or feel comfortable from a technical point of view because they expect that even if Wall Street is topping out, as cyclical factors indicate, the process will be slow and allow time to get out.

The market's current doldrums, he said, are probably the result of it being in a transition stage, moving from being "interest-rate driven to earnings driven."

He added: "Some groups likely to respond to the next rally attempt are chemicals, construction machinery, metal and mining and selected emerging growth stocks."

Alan Shaw, technical analyst at Smith Barney, also sees the "short-term picture brightening somewhat." But he warned about the "growing probability in the months ahead of a cyclical correction - an event that seems to unfold every four years or

H.K. Bank To Open In China

Beijing Allows Foreign Branch

By Jim Mann Los Angeles Times Service

BEIJING — For the first time since the Communist takeover in 1949, China on Wednesday gave permission for a foreign bank to open a branch inside its borders.

Chinese authorities approved a request by Hong Kong & Shanghai Banking Corp., Hong Kong's leading financial institution, to establish a branch bank in Shenzhen, the special economic zone China has set up alongside the British colony.

Representatives of foreign banking companies, many of which have been waiting since 1979 for permission to open branches in China, were generally pleased. "It's the first step towards liberalization, towards allowing foreign banks to do more business here," said the representative of one U.S. bank.

But they cautioned that the restrictions on foreign banking in China remain severe. So far, China has agreed to consider applications for foreign bank branches only in the four special economic zones in southern China: Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Xiamen and Shantou.

In addition, foreign bankers pointed out that the powers of the new branch will be carefully limited. "They can't get involved in for-eign currency banking," said one banking official in Beijing, "It's still a long way from being a real bank branch."

The new branch will, however, be permitted to make loans, to accept foreign-currency deposits, to issue guarantees and to handle export and import transactions.

Until now, four other banks have had functioning branches in China, all in Shanghai: Hong Kong & Shanghai, Chartered Bank, Bank of East Asia Ltd. and Overseas-Chinese Banking Corp. The four banks have been in China since the establishment of the People's Republic in 1949, but they have had no power to accept deposits or make loans.

Chicago Merc Faces New Challenge

By Steven Greenhouse

New York Times Service CHICAGO — For years, the Chicago Mercan-tile Exchange was known for having the hottest ideas around. It pioneered trading in currency futures and livestock futures.

But now its creative juices, some traders say, seem to be slowing just as they are starting to flow, albeit belatedly, at the Chicago Board of Trade. And that may be turning the tables not just on image, but also on growth.

"The real question for the Merc, the challenge they face, is what do they do next," said John M. Blin, director of options at Lasser Marshall Inc., a leading New York-based currency broker. Mr. Blin, who developed the Eurodollar futures con-tract for the Merc, added, "The Merc led the way in exchanges developing new products and diversi-fying their offerings. But now it appears that the major innovations in futures and options are probably behind us."

Two of the Merc's most recent ventures have started slowly. Trading in several of its currency options, introduced earlier this year, has stumbled, hampered by competition at other exchanges. And despite much fanfare, its recent link-up with the Singapore International Monetary Exchange has had unimpressive volume.

"The competition has definitely intensified," said William J. Brodsky, who assumed the exchange's presidency June 1. But Mr. Brodsky, 41, is confident that the Merc will continue to prosper.

Developing new products that will draw interest and trading volume is a critical role for any exchange. The Merc, like other exchanges, is a non-profit enterprise, whose 2,725 members include

Board of Trade Shows That It Can Be Innovative, Too brokerage firms and individuals who trade on the exchange's floor. Like most businesses, however, its growth — and the growth of its members — depends on diversification and a continuing flow of new products, should trading in other areas flag.

The Merc understands this well. The exchange has long been dwarfed by the much bigger Board of Trade, founded in 1848, whose corn and soybean trading far outstripped the Merc's trading in butter, eggs and cattle. In fact, the Merc, which was founded in 1898 as the Chicago Butter and Egg Board, has always seemed to be running to

But while the Merc remains No. 2 in volume, its rate of growth from the early 1970s to 1983 far outstripped the Board of Trade's. The big breakthrough, both for the Merc and for the commodities industry, came with the exchange's introduc-tion of financial-futures contracts, which enabled customers to protect themselves against currency and interest-rate fluctuations.

And the Merc has more new twists forthcoming according to Leo Melamed, a former Merc chairman and the wizard behind the financial-futures revolution. He rejects any suggestion that the Merc has slowed down or that the Board of Trade has surpassed it as an innovator. Mr. Melamed said the Merc's plans to trade futures on European currency units and zero-coupon bonds attest to its continued innovativeness.

Some of the Merc's biggest successes, Mr. Me-lamed pointed out, include the Standard & Poor's 500 futures contract to help investors who want to hedge against stock market swings, Swiss franc and German mark futures to hedge against currency

AT&T Is to Cut 24,000 Jobs At Major Unit

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK - American Telephone & Telegraph Co. said Wednesday that it is eliminating 24,000 jobs. or about 20 percent of the work force, at its Information Systems unit.

Robert E. Allen, chairman of the margins. He warned that market conditions could require additional job reductions.

Following the 24,000 reduction in jobs, Information Systems will have about 93,000 employees.

Although cuts were expected, the figure was higher than the 20,000 jobs hinted at last week by the company, and the announcement brought angry reaction from the Communications Workers of America, which represents AT&T employees. The union said the cost-cutting step was outrageous and would create major obstacles to next year's contract talks. The company said the majority of cuts will take place this year, with the balance being completed in 1986. It said about 30 percent of the jobs lost will be in manage-

Mr. Allen said the changes are possible because all resources necessary to manage Information Sys-tems business have been brought together in a single organization under common management.

Last April, he pointed out, the Federal Communications Commission approved a proposal that permitted Information Systems to streamline its operations.

He added that AT&T said it expects to begin achieving some of the benefits of the cost savings next year, and that the announcement Wednesday represents only one decision among many being made to realize improved profits.

Employees may be offered either a transfer to another job in ATT or financial incentives to leave, Mr. Allen said. Those incentives include newly enhanced pension plans for both management and nonmanagement employees. Attrition will take care of some of the jobs as positions are eliminated when people retire or resign.

After other efforts have been exhausted, the remaining surplus po-sitions will be eliminated through layoffs, Mr. Allen said.

Detailing the layoffs, he said the cuts would primarily affect staff unit, said the cuts were necessary to and support positions totaling reduce costs and improve profit about 15,000 nationwide. Other cuts include 4,000 installation, maintenance and other technical support jobs, 3,000 jobs that handle product distribution, and 2,000 hourly factory jobs that have already been announced.

Information Systems, formerly American Bell, markets computer systems to business customers with 80 or more lines.

The unit, which employed about 118,000 people, has trimmed back about 4,800 jobs since the first of the year. AT&T, the parent company, has some 360,000 employees on the parent some 360,000 employees on

Brazil's Bankers Agree to Deferral

NEW YORK — An interna-tional banking committee agreed Wednesday to recommend that Brazil's 700 creditor bankers extend a moratorium on the nation's debt repayment for another 140 days.

Brazil requested the delay because it still has not reached agreement with the International Monetary Fund on an economic austerity program it will follow in return for new loans. The moratorium covers only principal of the debt of more than $100 million. An earlier deferral expires at the end of the month.

William Rhodes, the Citi-bank official who chairs the committee, said that banks also will be asked to keep open $16-billion line of credit for Brazil.

West German chemicals companies, Hoechst AG and BASF AG, reported Wednesday increases in first-half profits and sales.

Hoechst said world group pretax earnings rose 11.5 percent to 1.65 billion Deutsche marks ($611 million) in the first half of 1985, from 1.48 billion DM a year earlier. Sales in the period totaled 22.22 billion DM, up 7 percent from 20.71 billion in the earlier period. Parent pretax profit totaled $13 million DM, up 26 percent from 644 million DM a year earlier. Sales for the parent company rose 9 percent to 7.91 billion DM from 7.24 billion DM earlier.

The figures were disclosed in an interim report to shareholders. Hoechst said that it expects business will remain satisfactory during the second half of 1985. The company added that even if worldwide economic activity slackens and the dollar continues to decline, it should show a satisfactory performance for the year.

2 Years After Rescue, H.K. Dollar Flies High

By Dinah Lee HONG KONG - Next month, Hong Kong will celebrate the second anniversary of "Black Saturday." That was Sept. 24, 1983, when uncertainty about the colony's future — once China takes over in 1997 — sent the Hong Kong dollar plummeting 10 percent, to a record low of 9.55 to the U.S. dollar. It was the largest single-day loss in the currency's history. The political anxiety that had been barely contained for many months burst into panicked buying of gold, U.S. dollars and all manner of consumer goods, from stereo systems to proceries. Hong Kong's political future now seems settled by a agreement. reached last December and ratified in May, between Beijing and Lon-don, and the Hong Kong dollar is strong. Huge amounts of capital are flowing into, not out of, the British colony. These inflows have produced an excess in liquidity in the Hong Kong-dollar market since the signing of the Sino-British agreement.

Call rates in the money market have dropped to just under 4 percent from a high of about 16 percent a year ago.

Not surprisingly, the economic recovery has led to widespread discussions during the last few weeks about whether the two-year-old government rescue package linking

Report Sees Slowdown In Britain's Economy

Reuters

LONDON — One of the longest periods of British economic growth in recent history may be coming to an end, according to an economic report published Wednesday.

The National Institute of Economic and Social Research, an independent economic forecasting group, said in its summer review that the next year would see a further slow rise in unemployment to 3.31 million from about 3.18 million, or 13.1 percent of the work force, last month.

"The long period of steady, if moderate, expansion may soon be coming to an end," the institute said. It based its forecast on an expected decline in manufacturing exports as a result ed decline in manufacturing exports as a result of the new strength of the pound against the dollar.

The institute expected total output to continue growing slowly until the end of this year before tailing off. It also forecast that inflation would be cut in half from its current annual rate of 7 percent, provided the pound remained steady against the dollar. This would produce a fall in interest rates and contribute to a sharp improvement in living standards for those with jobs, it said.

United Wins U.K. Clearance To Attempt Fleet Takeover

By Bob Hagerty
nternational Herald Tribune

LONDON — The government Wednesday cleared a plan by United Newspapers PLC to attempt a takeover of Fleet Holdings PLC which publishes the Daily Express, the Daily Star and other newspapers and magazines.

Based on Fleet's current share price, the company is valued at £279 million (about $389 million), United, which owns Punch and other magazines and newspapers, welcomed the decision but declined to announce terms. The company said its board would announce its intentions shortly. United already owns 20 percent of Fleet. In considering terms, United said, it would be influenced by a drop in the market value of Fleet's shareholding in Reuters Holdings PLC, to about £78 million from £92 million last March 25, when United announced its intention to acquire years of drilling. What was once thought to be a large, connected, oil-bearing formation has turned out to be a fractured structure of smaller oil de-

Fleet retorted Wednesday that its board believes the company's value is "greatly in excess of the current market price." Ian Irvine, Fleet's managing director, added: "We can see no reason why we should put two companies together such as Fleet and United."

In its report, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission said the proposed takeover would have no significant effect on newspaper com-

Derek Terrington, a newspaper analyst at Grieveson, Grant & Co., said he believed United was likely to seek a partner to help it buy and operate Fleet

He noted that the acquisition would about double the size of United and that the company has had no experience in running na-tional newspapers since 1930.

Finding such a partner would not be difficult, Mr. Terrington suggested. "There's always some-body willing to have a bash at run-ning national newspapers," he said. #### Sir Clive Given Confidence Vote From Creditors

LONDON — Sir Clive Sinclair, the British inventor and entrepreneur who is fighting to keep his computer company afloat, appeared Wednesday to have won a breathing space from his creditors.

Sir Clive's creditors, who are owed an estimated £15 million ($20.7 million), said they were "broadly supportive" of his company, Sinclair Research, and hoped to reach an agree-ment on rescheduling the debt within the next few days.

The statement by the creditors, which include Barclays Bank, Citibank and the company's main suppliers Thorn-EMI and Timex, followed a meeting with Sic Cline aciding this make with Sir Clive earlier this week.

Commercially available bank deposit rates for three months fell below the Hong Kong annual rate of inflation of about 3.6 percent, making them negative interest rates in inflation-adjusted terms.

Market rumors that the link would be adjusted to accommodate the strong Hong Kong dollar gained momentum, and the British-based Henley Center for Forecasting reported that a continuing weaker U.S. dollar and capital inflows to Hong Kong would result in a "relaxation" of the link in the last quarter of this year.

However, in the weeks since the last readjustment of the local interest rates, the U.S. dollar has gradually firmed in Hong Kong with the help of large Hong Kong banks, particularly Hongkong & Shang-hai. They are reportedly selling dollar Wednesday in Hong Kong. Continuing low Hong Kong-dollar interest rates have speeded up a property-market recovery, which was already well underway. The low interest rates have also fueled the local stock market, which leaped 29 points Aug. 6, to pierce the 1,700 mark on the Hang Seng index, its highest level in four years. On Wednesday, however, the Hang Seng fell 41.96, to 1,650.78.

However, speculation about the possible future readjustment of the link in the future lingers, not entirely erased by repeated public gov-erament endorsements of the link. In July, the colony's secretary for monetary affairs, Douglas Blye, said that the government might even approve of negative deposit interest rates, whereby bank cus-tomers would be charged for making deposits. Peter Wrangham, gen-eral manager of Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank, said the imposition of negative interest rates was possible, "but practically speaking, terribly difficult to implement."

At the same time, Mr. Wrangham said it was premature to assume that a readjustment of the link was needed.

ATLANTA - Cocs-Cols Co. has vowed to keep secret its 99-year-old formula for Coke, despite a federal judge's rolling ordering the soft-drink maker to disclose the recipe.

The order came Tuesday in a 1983 lawsuit filed by 40 Coca-Cola bottlers over the company's pricing policies. The bottlers are seeking formulas for all of Coca-Cola's drinks in a bid to prove that the beverages do not differ substantially and should be sold under the

Borrowers Tap Virtually All Market Sectors

By Peter Conradi

LONDON — Borrowers tapped virtually all sectors of the Eurobond market Wednesday with a crop of new issues that included two more dollar-straight issues and a couple of dual-currency yen/dollar bonds dealers said. But trading on the secondary market continued quiet, with dol-lar-straight-bond prices up 1/4 to 1/4 point from Tuesday's close and floating-rate notes unchanged to slightly higher.

On the heels of Tuesday's $400 million of dollar-straight Eurobonds, the Dutch insurance company, Aegon NV, launched a $75million, seven-year issue paying 10% percent and priced at par.

The lead manager, Morgan Guaranty Ltd., said Acgon's bond was callable in the fifth year at 101, declining by 1/2 point a year thereafter. It was quoted on the market around its total 1%-percent fees at a discount of about 114.

her husband, an admiral who had found him-self in deeper waters than he was accustomed to, signed a legal deed of separation. Both women had been left with a huge sense of guilt about Ladye, which they were able to alleviate only by making a cult of her memory, arranging for Masses to be said for her and burning votive candles (they were both devout Catholics), and communing with her through a medium. (they were also spiritualists, inconsistent though that might seem with their Catholical

The seances remained a feature of their life together over the next 25 years. As Michael Baker says in his new biography of Radclyffe Hall, "Ladye, alive, had proved a source of friction and guilt between John and Una Dead, she was transformed for both into a combination of idol, confidente and ultimate arbiter." While only a few close friends were let in on the secret of their enduring connection with her, it was hinted at in the dedication Hall used in several of her books, which has provided Baker with his title - "To Our Three

At first sight this may not seem a particularly appealing story, but in Baker's hands it makes riveting reading. You begin by wonder-ing whether Hall can sustain a full-scale biog-raphy (by now "The Well of Loneliness" has little more than limited historical interest); you end up by being avid for yet more detail. The book is saturated in the atmosphere, idiom, fashions (including emotional fashions) of its period; it throws fascinating light on a literary world that no longer exists and on a lesbian world that was still half-hidden in the shadows.

In the end, however, the chief fascination lies in Radclyffe Hall's personality, and in the interplay (sometimes poignant, sometimes comic) between her general outlook — which in most respects was highly conventional and conservative — and the rebellious role into which she was cast by her determination to be honest about her sexual preferences. She could be very seigneurial, remarking of one bibulous aristocratic guest, for instance, dye," who was 23 years her senior — a famus beauty (though she had begun to put on weight) and a renowned amateur lieder singer. Ladye's elderly husband acquiesced in the women's friendship, and after his death they set up house together. The idyll clouded over that "if you want to have a properly run house, you can't have people like him around. The servants won't stand for it." Some of her views do her little credit — she was a fervent admirer of Mussolini - and there were times when her courage in personal matters was indistinguishable from ruthlessness. But she suffered, particularly in later life, when she became horribly obsessed with a White Russian called Evguenia Souline who preyed on her for money painful and rather sinister episode that dragged on for years.

She also did the undeniably brave thing in going ahead with "The Well of Loneliness." The book may be dated, it may draw a misleading equation between lesbianism and pseudoculinity, but to read Baker's account of its publication and the witch hunt stirred up against it is to acquire fresh respect for its author. Her full story was well worth telling. and Baker tells it with a nice sense for of its dramatic possibilities.

Athletes Taking Out Insurance Against Career-Ending Injuries

By Gary Libman Los Angeles Times Service LOS ANGELES - When Dave Williams was catching 101 passes and was being chosen all-American at the University of Illinois last season, he didn't worry about a career-ending injury. But his father worried enough for both of them.

"One time my father made the comment that he wouldn't let me go back to school unless I got insurance," said the wide receiver. "I don't know how serious he was, but

National Football League scouts had said that Williams could be a first-round choice in their player draft this winter, and Williams realized he would get hit hard five or six times a game during his senior year this fall. So the 6-foot-4, 197pound (1.93-meter, 89.3-kilogram) player began to consider a $1 miltion Lloyd's of London policy to protect against a career-ending in-

Williams - whose brother Oliver and whose cousin, Phil Smith, are wide receivers for the Indianapolis Colts - mentioned his situation to his coach, Mike White, who said "he would find out the details" of the policy.... "He knows the things I'll be doing."

White recommended the insurance to Williams, who played a year at Harbor Junior College in Los Angeles before transferring to Illinois, and to Illinois quarterback Jack Trudeau, another potential first-round draft pick.

Last April each player borrowed more than $11,000 to buy a policy, which pays for a career-ending injury during the 15 months before each attends his first professional training camp next summer. Williams and Trudeau bought the same protection as athletes including University of Iowa quarterback Chuck Long and former University of Miami quarterback Bernie Kosar, who signed this summer with Cleveland of the NFL.

Former University of Georgia running back Herschel Walker bought coverage in 1981 before joining the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League.

The insurance is purchased by only the "top echelon of professional prospects who have proven value" as far as professional sports are concerned, said John Leavens, director of the legislative services committee of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The NCAA spurred the sale of the policies last January when it passed a rule that an athlete could buy them by borrowing money from a lending institution.

The NCAA hoped the rule would keep star athletes in school for another year, especially basketball players who can sign up for the National Basketball Association draft after each season of college eligibility. Draft requirements in football and baseball are more

The NCAA prohibited coaches stringent. and agents from buying the insurance - coaches so they would not use it to keep athletes in school and agents so they would not use it to gain control over an athlete before the time in his career when it became legal.

The buying of insurance by college players coincides with a similar move among professionals.

Although golfer Arnold Palmer insured himself against a careerending injury as early as the 1950s, snany more athletes buy policies now as athletic salaries and the stakes of athletic careers escalate. Player agents and insurance representatives say that many contracts in professional baseball and basketball are guaranteed, but that most football contracts are not - so the policies can be particularly bounds or make 10 more yards, I'm helpful to NFL players.

In baseball and basketball the policies are typically used by young players who have not yet signed long-term, guaranteed contracts.

"It's a good vehicle to guarantee protecting an athlete during a transitional period," said Ron Shapiro, the Baltimore agent for California Angel third baseman Doug De-Cinces and others. When the Baltimore Orioles visited Japan last winter. Shapiro took out a three-month policy on pitcher Mike Boddiker, 27, who won 20 games and lost only 11 in 1984, for $500,000, the anticipated worth of Boddiker's contract the following

Without such a policy, an athlete can be in jeopardy. Quarterback Bert Jones of the Los Angeles Rams retired in 1983 after an injury' that required the surgical removal of a ruptured cervical disk and the fusion of two broken vertebrae in the neck area. Jones was covered for a careerending mjury and collected, ac-cording to John Jemison, owner of Sports Insurance International Services in Houston. The policy paid $1 million, a source said.

A 1981 car accident paralyzed center Landon Turner and ended his career a few months after his University of Indiana team won the NCAA basketball championship. Turner received minimal help from his own auto insurance policy and his father's hospital-medical cover-

In 1978, a collision with Oakland defensive back Jack Tatum paralyzed New England Patriots wide receiver Darryl Stingley and ended his career.

The league agreed to pay the remainder of Stingley's medical and living expenses after workmen's compensation and the NFL Players Association disability plan proved inadequate,

Although the new policies guard against such occurrences, some

"You only get paid off if you're permanently disabled and can't play the sport again," said Peter ohnson, vice president of the International Marketing Group in Cleveland, who represents tennis player Martina Navratilova and football player Walker.

"Let's say you get injured in a post-season all-star game. You can play afterwards [but not as well] and your value goes down. You still can't cash in."

"What's probably needed is some type of program through the NCAA where all students get some type of disability [insurance]," said George Andrews, a Chicago attorney who represents Earvin Johnson of the NBA's Los Angeles Lakers.

Andrews notes that NCAA schools are required to keep injured student athletes on scholarship only for the year in which they are

"I'm not saying take care of him for life," he said, "but there should be some kind of therapy and job

BANGKOK POSTCARD

Japanese Who Stayed

By Surin Maisrikrod The Associated Press

BANGKOK — Japanese soldiers, young energetic and fired by nationalism, were sent to attack Thailand in World War II. For some of them, what was once a vassal land has become a happy home, probably forever.

About 50 Japanese veterans never returned home after their country surrendered 40 years ago. At first, some hid their identities. By now, however, according to Japanese officials in Bangkok, virtually all of the veterans have been quietly absorbed into Thai society.

"This is definitely my home. If Japan ever invades Thailand again, I will fight for the Thais," said Motoji Otani, 64, who owns a refrigerator repair shop called Thaiotani Electric

"I don't consider myself a Japanese now. I even forgot half the language," said Zunao Sasabe, a gardener, who fought as a Japanese Imperial Army infantryman in China, Cambodia and Vietnam.

On Dec. 8, 1941, after a brief resistance, Thailand relented to Japanese demands for use of its territory to as a launching pad for invasions of Burma and the Malay peninsula. The Bangkok government was later pressured into declaring war on the Allies, though many Thais joined an anti-Japanese resistance movement and Thailand was not treated by the Allies as an enemy nation after the war ended.

When Japan surrendered, some Japanese soldiers stationed in Asian countries that had been conquered by the imperial army chose not to return to Japan.

About 20 settled in Burma. Last month one of these, Sakunojo Kita-mura, made his first visit back to Japan. For the occasion, he dressed in a traditional Burmese sarong, Matsuda said he escaped after his surrender and lived in disguise at a Buddhist monastery south of Bangkok, where he fell in love with a Thai woman whom he later married. Thai friends helped hide him from the Thai authorities, he said.

Matsuda has become a wealthy man, and plays an active role in the management of his four businesses: a travel agency, a coffee plantation, a night club and a company servicing sugar plants. He is a prominent member of the local Japanese business community - the largest foreign group in the country.

By contrast, Sasabe, the gardener, said: "I still live hand-to-mouth. I earn about 100 baht [about $3.70] a day from my carpentry," in addi-tion to his job at an orchid nursery on the outskirts of Bangkok. He recently moved to Bangkok from the provinces, where over the years he had done rice farming and small-time contract work. Two of his daughters are abroad, in Italy and the United States.

He praised the hospitality he has received from Thai friends and acquaintances, who helped him flee the army and then obtained immigration documents for him under a alse Chinese identity.

Otani, echoing statements by other veterans, said: "I did not really know what was going on at that time. I was so young and everyone was a soldier. It was fun mehow to join the army. When I think back to those days it was all wrong. The Japanese army was so arrogant. But the war proved Japan was just a frog in a small pond." Otani also made his escape when the war ended, went into business and started a family. He has five children and six grandchildren from two marriages. He said he now rarely eats Japanese food, and he takes part in traditional Thai

Otani said he had visited Japan twice since the end of the war.

"I felt so different and empty," he recalled. "I could not even travel alone in Japan. I was really a foreigner. The moment I arrived back at Don Muang" - Bangkok's air-

WILLEMSTAD, Curação —
In the annual carnival parade this year - the biggest, most rambunctious celebration on this island off Venezuela - a tall, imposing woman in a pink and green lame costume got a little more attention than the other

To the delight of some and the dismay of others, the focus of the cheers and flying confetti was Maria Liberia-Peters, who last September became the first woman to serve as prime minister of the Netherlands Antilles, six Caribbean islands colonized by the Dutch and now largely self-gov-

The 43-year-old former kindergarten teacher says she struggled with whether to participate in the carnival, as she had for the previous seven years, instead of taking the prime minister's traditional place in the reviewing stand.

She knew she wouldn't be happy as a spectator, she said. "Some people just feel it's not appropri-ate for a prime minister. I said, no, in the first place I'm Maria and in the second place I'm prime minister. So I'm going."

That kind of spirit and determination have made her one of the Netherlands Antilles' most popular leaders. Liberia-Peters, eader of the National People's Party, admires former U. S. Representative Shirley Chisholm and the late Indira Gandhi of India, and she is being favorably com-pared to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain.

She has come to power in one of the most turbulent periods in Antillean history. After decades of prosperity, the economies of the two biggest islands, Curação and Aruba, are in trouble. Further, Aruba, which with Curação had shared the burden of supporting the four other islands, plans to separate from the federation early next year. The Exxon oil refinery that provided about 50 percent of Aruba's income closed last spring, and the Shell refinery in Curação, a major employer, says it may have to close unless the government can buy two-thirds of the failing business.

open. She said she was also working on ways to balance the econoand community leaders. my as revenues fall.

What I really hope," she said, "is that I will be successful in at least setting out the lines for the future, for a new future, so that the people of the Netherlands Antilles can say, 'O.K., we're going through a difficult situation, but nevertheless this is where it's going to lead to,' and that there is light. It's a situation you have to handle very carefully, so that my people don't panic. As the Spanish people say, I have to keep

Liberia-Peters laughs easily and has the politician's knack of turning aside or seeming not to hear difficult questions. Like many Antilleans, she speaks four languages: Dutch, English, Spanish and Papiamento, a local combination of the first three with some Portuguese added. She peppers her English with Spanish exciamations such as "Correcto!"

away la desesperación, the desper-

and "Si, si!" More than previous prime ministers, residents say, she is using newspapers, radio and television Liberia-Peters's government is to reach the 240,000 people of the trying to find a way to keep Shell Netherlands Antilles. She has also met more often with business People appreciate that she keeps the various groups informed and that she is as balanced as possible and doesn't take sides," said Lionel Capriles, the head of Maduro & Curiel's Bank, the largest in the Antilles, Liberia-Peters has also traveled more than is customary for prime ministers of the Netherlands Antilles, whose defense and many foreign affairs matters are still handled by the Netherlands.

"I feel it's important that we let the region, especially, know who we are, where we are, what we are and what we want," she said.

In the fall of 1976, Liberia-Peters won a seat in the island government in Curação, which is similar to the Antilles government and has a larger budget. Since then she has been in charge of economic affairs, public health, labor and several other matters in the Curação government. When the National People's Party took a leading role in forming a new Antilles government it turned to Liberia-Peters, its top vote-getter, to be prime mer kindergarten teacher is doing as prime minister, Liberia-Peters coolly suggests that "it would be incorrect to think that nothing has happened" since 1962, when she first entered a classroom as a teacher. She has a group of advis ers that she calls her "think tank," but supporters say she has a mind of her own. "She asks and she listens," Capriles said, "but she takes the decision." Among her strengths, admirers say, is an ability to gain a consensus from the governing council of ministers and other groups with which she works. "She speaks with authority and she can con-vince people," a banker said.

Economists say that one of the Netherlands Antilles' problems is high wages that prevent the is-lands' goods and services from being competitive internationally. But the prime minister has resisted pressure to impose an across-the-board pay cut of 15 to Instead, she said, she plans to put the economists' reports before the workers and their unions and give them "a reasonable time to get the feeling that, 'O.K., we have been granted the possibility to also make a move." Then, if they "don't come across," she said, "I think you have the way open for imposing" a pay cut. Liberia-Peters is married to a civil servant, Niels Peters, 46. She met him on a high school basketball court; she was playing center on a girls' team and Peters, who had gained a reputation throughout the Antilles as a center, was assisting the coach.

It was not a blazing romance. She went off to the Netherlands for four years of college. Back in Curação, she joined a women's basketball team affiliated with a Roman Catholic school. Peters was on the men's team. About four years later they went on their first date.

Six years later - 14 years after they met — they were married. They have a 6-year-old daughter and a 4-year-old son, both born in the United States and adopted through the Roman Catholic archdiocese of New York.

She is asked what impressed her about Peters the first time they met. "His hook shot," she replied instantly.
